A. Walter Dorn's World Order for a New Millennium

Number of Pages: 6

I write to follow up my correspondence with Ms. Gillian Martin Sorensen of February 1, 1999. Karen Wolny, the editor in politics here in the Scholarly and Reference Division of St. Martin's Press, is publishing a book edited by A. Walter Dorn called World Order for a New Millennium.

This book results from a conference on world peace held in Toronto in 1997. The Secretary-General sent a message to the conference attendees, and Professor Dorn would very much like to use this message as a preface to the volume we are now publishing. I write to request permission to include the message in our book.

Enclosed please find a copy of the message. I have also taken the liberty of drafting a letter of permission which simply requires a signature to allow us to reprint the message.

Because the book is now well into production, a swift reply would be most appreciated. Would it be possible to return the enclosed permission letter by Friday, May 7th? I can be reached at the contact numbers above if you have any further questions.

Thank you so much for your support of our project.

Dear Ms. Sorensen

--EOSG

Vorld Order conference of June 6-8, 1998. I enclose a copy of his message with this letter.

We would like to include this selection in a forthcoming book edited by A. Walter Dorn entitled World Order for a New Millennium: Political. Cultural and Spiritual Approaches to Building Peace; to be published by the Scholarly and Reference Division of St. Martin's Press in New York. You may recall that Walter Dorn wrote to you on December 15, 1998 alerting you to his plans to use the message at the beginning of his book. He received no response to his letter, which he understood to indicate implicit pennission to reprint the message. I write to you now, however, because we require written permission, and I hope that you can kindly help me.

Publication of World Order for a New Millennium is planned for May 1999 in hardback, priced at approximately $49.95 with a print run of approximately 800 copies. Please note that the book is a scholarly work aimed at an academic audience. We are seeking non-exclusive rights to reprint the piece in the English language and distribute it worldwide. Additionally, we would like to use the Secretary-General's name on the cover of the book, in a line that follows the editor's name and reads "With a message from UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan." Appropriate credit will, of course, be given in the book's acknowledgments.

Consideration of this request at your earliest convenience will be most appreciated. As our book is just about to enter the production process and we are concerned about time, a reply by fax would be most helpful.

Sincerely,

Amy Reading Editorial Assistant

Message from the Secretary-General of the United Nations

Kofi Annan

United Nations Secretary-General

Editor's Note: This message was sent by the Secretary-General to the World Order Conference of 6-8 June 1998, which was the source of most of the papers in this volume.

I am pleased to send greetings to all those gathered in Toronto this weekend for he Conference on the Evolution of World Order. With that theme in front of you, you have a great deal to discuss and think about in three days.

One of the guiding beacons of the work of the United Nations recently has been its commitment to sustainable development. On both the national and international levels the surest foundation for peace, stability and security is economic and social development. Peace-keeping and peace-building may catch the headlines, but in terms of resources and of the changes in peoples lives, the development work of the United Nations is far more significant.

Partnership and cooperation are onucial elements here. Governments, the private sector, local authorities and non-governmental organizations must develop and improve their working links with each other and the United Nations, and the United Nations must enhance its cooperation with regional bodies and other institutions and intensify dialogue with civil society and the business community.

A new global social and economic agenda is in the making. The major United Nations conferences of this decade—on environment and development, human rights, population policy, social development, women and human settlement—have accomplished a great deal to clarify and focus thinking on some of the major challenges facing society. As these conferences have repeatedly demonstrated, there is a very lively interest at the grassroots level in what citizens can do to contribute to development. That is good news indeed, for without citizen participation, government efforts to improve people's lives stand little chance of lasting success.

Sustainable development—that must be one of the primary focuses of the Untied Nations in coming years. When people live in a society where they have something to contribute and something to gain, they have no interest in taking up weapons. When a state can be an active, respected participant in world trade and international affairs, the government can concentrate on constructive matters. In short, sustainable development is essential for sustainable peace. That is, after all the raison d'etre of the United Nations.

World Order for a New Millennium

Political, Cultural and Spiritual Approaches to Building Peace

Edited by A. Walter Dorn

World Order for a New Millennium examines one of the major questions of our age: how humanity should organize itself on the highest levels of governance — the global level. A just world order must have a deep foundation, including the development of a global culture of peace and spirituality. The increased role of women and non-governmental organizations is crucial, as is the mutual understanding, appreciation, and even synthesis of religions. With an integrated approach to world order, the deeper peace that humanity needs and longs for could be possible. World Order for a New Millennium provides an overview of the various types of world order, based on the three strategies of coercion, exchange, and integration. It then reviews the development of international law and the current means of promoting and enforcing it, in the absence of an international police force. The essays look at the role of the military in the Cold War and after, and review the prospects for war and peace in the next century.

A. Walter Dorn is a Visiting Fellow at Cornell University in the Peace Studies Program and on faculty at the Pearson Peacekeeping Center in Nova Scotia, Canada.
